Morning Consult Health will be off Monday for Presidents Day. Publication of the morning newsletters and afternoon updates will resume the following day.

Top Stories

* The 5th Circuit Court of Appeals will let House Democrats intervene in a case in which a federal judge ruled that the Affordable Care Act is unconstitutional after Congress terminated the law's penalty on consumers who do not have health insurance. The court also declined a request from Democratic attorneys general to expedite the case by holding oral arguments in July. (

* President Donald Trump is expected to sign spending legislation during a 10 a.m. event at the White House that would fund federal agencies including the Food and Drug Administration, averting a government shutdown. Trump said he would declare a national emergency to secure additional funding for a U.S.-Mexico border wall, which would allow him to divert money from other government programs, including $2.5 billion from the Department of Defense drug interdiction program, government officials said. * Gilead Sciences Inc. is facing a whistleblower lawsuit that alleges the pharmaceutical company provided kickbacks to providers, government agencies and other groups to increase sales of its hepatitis and HIV drugs. The lawsuit by Allen Kuo, which is alleging $3.4 billion in damages, contends that Gilead's Frontlines of Communities in the United States program paid for doctors' salaries, patient travel to screenings, upgrades to provider medical software and other incentives, which the lawsuit says resulted in unnecessary tests and prescriptions for Gilead's drugs. Cut Drug Prices. Not 340B.

At no cost to taxpayers, the 340B program is critical to the health of America's patients because it allows hospitals serving vulnerable communities to address the health care needs of their communities, including providing free or substantially discounted prescriptions to low-income and rural patients, operating free clinics, treating patients with substance use disorders, and sustaining access to other lifesaving services for patients. Weakening this vital program will hurt patients.

Robert Popovian, Morning Consult

For the past two decades, a plethora of organizations identified by various innocuous acronyms (e.g., NICE - National Institute for Health and Care Excellence) has tried to convince policymakers, providers and patients among others that economic analysis or modeling ought to be used to determine drug coverage decisions. They have tried to define value and insert value as a component into models so that they may analyze the appropriateness of payment for a pharmaceutical.

* Kaiser Permanente plans to waive tuition for all of its students in the first five graduating classes of its new medical school set to open in Pasadena, Calif., in 2020, joining the New York University School of Medicine in providing a tuition-free medical education to attract prospective students who might avoid medical school due to the cost. While neither school will cover room and board, Kaiser will offer its students health coverage through its insurance system. * Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) announced his plans to run for president in the 2020 election, with an agenda that includes a "Medicare for all" health care system, just like his 2016 presidential platform. Sanders has introduced "Medicare for all" legislation that would provide health coverage for every American through a government plan and would eliminate private insurance. * Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-Ohio) threw his support behind a Medicare buy-in proposal that would expand the federal program to people age 50 and older, saying it's a plan that would "help people now" and improve the Affordable Care Act. Brown, who is considered a possible 2020 presidential candidate, said "Medicare for all," which has been promoted by other Democratic lawmakers and presidential candidates, would be "difficult" and "take a while" to implement. Peter Sullivan, The Hill

Democrats and the Trump administration are beginning to hold talks on lowering drug prices as they look for a rare area of common ground. Both President Trump and congressional Democrats say that lowering drug prices is a priority, providing a potential area for bipartisan action in a government that is otherwise bitterly divided after a months-long fight over border security.

The Editorial Board, The New York Times

It's been nearly 10 years since the passage of the Affordable Care Act - one of the most sweeping health care overhauls in the nation's history. The law has brought the number of uninsured people in America to an all-time low, secured protections for people with pre-existing conditions and advanced the notion that health care is a human right.

- Biogen Inc. and Eisai Co. Ltd. are suspending two Phase 3 clinical trials evaluating the efficacy and safety of a drug for Alzheimer's disease, based on an independent analysis that aducanumab was not slowing the progression of the disease. Biogen shares have since tumbled 26 percent since its announcement, which is particularly troubling for those who believed targeting beta-amyloid - brain-destroying protein fragments - was the future of treatment for Alzheimer's. - A new report from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found the increase in opioid overdose deaths linked to the synthetic opioid fentanyl, a drug with up to 50 times the potency of heroin, has been particularly sharp among racial minorities. The death rate among African-Americans from overdoses involving fentanyl grew an average of 141 percent every year from 2011 to 2016, compared to 118 percent for Hispanics and 61 percent for non-Hispanic whites, although the death rate remains highest among whites. - Mississippi Gov. Phil Bryant will sign a bill today banning most abortions after the detection of a fetal heartbeat, which usually occurs around six weeks into pregnancy. It will be one of the strictest abortion laws in the country if it takes effect as scheduled on July 1, with the Center for Reproductive Rights already planning to file a lawsuit against the state, as Georgia and Tennessee consider similar bills. The California Legislature has revived an insurer-backed bill to cap dialysis pay at Medicare rates if industry-backed third parties have helped a patient pay for the insurance to fund treatment and don't give certain disclosures. The new momentum has picked up less than a year after then-Gov. Jerry Brown vetoed a similar measure amid intense opposition from the dialysis industry.

Privately-insured patients transported by air ambulance providers outside of their insurers' provider networks are at financial risk for balance bills—which, as the figure shows, are for the difference between prices charged by providers and payments by insurers. Any balance bills are in addition to copayments or other types of cost-sharing typically paid by patients under their insurance coverage.

Morning Consult Health will be off Monday for Presidents Day. Publication of the morning newsletters and afternoon updates will resume the following day.

Top Stories

- The 5th Circuit Court of Appeals will let House Democrats intervene in a case in which a federal judge ruled that the Affordable Care Act is unconstitutional after Congress terminated the law's penalty on consumers who do not have health insurance. The court also declined a request from Democratic attorneys general to expedite the case by holding oral arguments in July. (Politico

- President Donald Trump is expected to sign spending legislation during a 10 a.m. event at the White House that would fund federal agencies including the Food and Drug Administration, averting a government shutdown. Trump said he would declare a national emergency to secure additional funding for a U.S.-Mexico border wall, which would allow him to divert money from other government programs, including $2.5 billion from the Department of Defense drug interdiction program, government officials said. - Gilead Sciences Inc. is facing a whistleblower lawsuit that alleges the pharmaceutical company provided kickbacks to providers, government agencies and other groups to increase sales of its hepatitis and HIV drugs. The lawsuit by Allen Kuo, which is alleging $3.4 billion in damages, contends that Gilead's Frontlines of Communities in the United States program paid for doctors' salaries, patient travel to screenings, upgrades to provider medical software and other incentives, which the lawsuit says resulted in unnecessary tests and prescriptions for Gilead's drugs. Cut Drug Prices. Not 340B.

At no cost to taxpayers, the 340B program is critical to the health of America's patients because it allows hospitals serving vulnerable communities to address the health care needs of their communities, including providing free or substantially discounted prescriptions to low-income and rural patients, operating free clinics, treating patients with substance use disorders, and sustaining access to other lifesaving services for patients. Weakening this vital program will hurt patients.

Economic Analysis Falls Short When It Comes to Medicines' Value

<<https://click.e.morningconsult.com/?qs=7c757ced259fccba68113abda80ce2e764f9581c867f806a476952ce4f43f259c86e82a58619f576670f644148dc4c23>>Robert Popovian, Morning Consult

For the past two decades, a plethora of organizations identified by various innocuous acronyms (e.g., NICE - National Institute for Health and Care Excellence) has tried to convince policymakers, providers and patients among others that economic analysis or modeling ought to be used to determine drug coverage decisions. They have tried to define value and insert value as a component into models so that they may analyze the appropriateness of payment for a pharmaceutical.

A Message from America's 340B Hospitals:

At no cost to taxpayers, the 340B program is critical to the health of America's patients because it allows hospitals serving vulnerable communities to address the health care needs of their communities, including providing free or substantially discounted prescriptions to low-income and rural patients, operating free clinics, treating patients with substance use disorders, and sustaining access to other lifesaving services for patients. Weakening this vital program will hurt patients.

In 2016, Montana expanded its Medicaid program under the Health and Economic Livelihood Partnership (HELP) Act. Legislators are considering a bill, the Medicaid Reform and Integrity Act (MeRIA), to impose work requirements ("community engagement") and terminate Medicaid insurance coverage if beneficiaries work less than 20 hours a week for three or more months. This analysis is based on a draft of the bill dated February 5, 2019.

Top Stories

• Kaiser Permanente plans to waive tuition for all of its students in the first five graduating classes of its new medical school set to open in Pasadena, Calif., in 2020, joining the New York University School of Medicine in providing a tuition-free medical education to attract prospective students who might avoid medical school due to the cost. While neither school will cover room and board, Kaiser will offer its students health coverage through its insurance system. (The New York Times

• Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.) announced his plans to run for president in the 2020 election, with an agenda that includes a "Medicare for all" health care system, just like his 2016 presidential platform. Sanders has introduced "Medicare for all" legislation that would provide health coverage for every American through a government plan and would eliminate private insurance. (The Washington Post

• Sen. Sherrod Brown (D-Ohio) threw his support behind a Medicare buy-in proposal that would expand the federal program to people age 50 and older, saying it's a plan that would "help people now" and improve the Affordable Care Act. Brown, who is considered a possible 2020 presidential candidate, said "Medicare for all," which has been promoted by other Democratic lawmakers and presidential candidates, would be "difficult" and "take a while" to implement. When it comes to regulatory science and the broader issues facing the Food and Drug Administration, there will always be significant gradations of nuance and ambiguity. "Predictability" is a trail that regulators and regulated must blaze together - sometimes heroically and at other times with greater caution.

How Much Will Americans Sacrifice for Good Health Care?

It's been nearly 10 years since the passage of the Affordable Care Act - one of the most sweeping health care overhauls in the nation's history. The law has brought the number of uninsured people in America to an all-time low, secured protections for people with pre-existing conditions and advanced the notion that health care is a human right.

Top Stories

- The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services is offering new strategies to help states use federal waivers to customize their Medicaid programs, with changes such as imposing work requirements or the elimination of retrospective Medicaid eligibility. The tools include templates for implementation and monitoring of changes as well as guidance on evaluation procedures to help states draw a link between work requirements and employment among the population. - U.S District Judge James Boasberg will issue a ruling on the Trump administration's approval of Medicaid work requirements in Arkansas and Kentucky by April 1, a decision which could have wide-ranging implications for the other states hoping to impose work rules on some Medicaid beneficiaries. During the hearings, Boasberg - who previously halted the implementation of requirements in Kentucky - focused on whether work requirements help to achieve the purpose of Medicaid. - American teenagers and young adults between the ages of 14 and 27 years old - also known as Generation Z - are more prone to emotional distress, suicide and major depression than the millennial generation was at the same age, according to a new study. In 2017, approximately 13 percent of Americans 12 to 25 years old expressed symptoms within the past year of an episode of major depression - a surge of 62 percent in eight years - with suicide rates among young adults ages 18 to 25 rising by up to 56 percent between 2008 and 2017. The Trump administration's decision to alter the way it punishes nursing homes has resulted in lower fines against many facilities found to have endangered or injured residents. Federal records show that the average fine dropped to $28,405 under the current administration, down from $41,260 in 2016, President Obama's final year in office.

Dr. Scott Gottlieb became commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration in 2017 with an ambitious plan to reduce cigarette smoking, a habit that kills nearly half a million Americans each year, by shifting smokers to less harmful alternatives like e-cigarettes. But he was quickly embroiled in an unexpected crisis: the explosion of vaping among millions of middle and high school students, many of whom were getting addicted to nicotine.

Maryland state legislators are looking to help people desperate for kidney transplants by enacting new protections for donors. The "Organ Donation - Prohibition on Discrimination by Insurer and Unpaid Leave Bill" would prevent life and disability insurers from denying or canceling living organ donors' policies on the basis of health as a result. The bill also stipulates that living organ donors must receive up to 60 business days in unpaid leave.

A Virginia medical school kept silent about winning a national award for fostering diversity while a controversy over racist photos found on Virginia Gov. Ralph Northam's yearbook page played out last month. The National Association of Diversity Officers in Higher Education chose Eastern Virginia Medical School for an award given to one school each year that has made great strides in promoting diversity.

The generic drug industry should cause prices for medications to drop. But lately it has been engaging in price gouging and making it difficult to obtaining some vital medications.

Replacing most private insurance with a Medicare-like system for everyone has instilled both hope and fear across the country depending on people's perspective or financial stake in the current health care system. But a closer look at recent congressional bills introduced by Democrats reveals a set of far more nuanced approaches to improving the nation's health care system than the term Medicare for All suggests.

Tara Straw, Center on Budget and Policy Priorities

The Affordable Care Act (ACA) established health insurance marketplaces to serve as a single place where consumers could compare health plans based on price and quality and apply for financial assistance. All marketplace plans meet a consistent set of standards: they cover a core set of benefits, can't set premiums based on health status or gender, and are displayed in an impartial way to simplify consumer decision-making.

In this population-based study of 87 hospitals and 143??174 patients, outcomes were not consistently better at Honor Roll hospitals. Within networks, the risk-adjusted rates for all outcomes varied widely across affiliated hospitals; for example, the differences in failure to rescue varied by 1.1-fold in some networks to as much as 4.9-fold in others.

- In a new paper, the authors of federal recommendations for the prescription of opioids for chronic pain treatment said the guidelines have been improperly implemented by the health care system, withholding pain medication from patients who need them. The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention prescribing guidelines were intended to be applied for patients with chronic pain not tied to cancer, palliative care or end-of-life care, the authors said, but they have been erroneously affecting care for the wrong sets of patients at times. On March 1, Gov. Mike Dunleavy sent a letter to President Donald Trump in which he said, among other things: "Your Medicaid administrator, Seema Verma, has urged us to be the first state to receive Medicaid dollars as a block grant. We are eager to do this, but your support of her on this 'first' will keep the proper focus and speed on the application."

The Trump administration is preparing to roll back protections for transgender patients while empowering health care workers to refuse care based on religious objections, according to three officials with knowledge of the pending regulations. The long-expected rules have alarmed patient advocates and public health groups, which have warned the health department that the rules could harm vulnerable populations' access to care.

A nationally renowned drug rehab program in Texas and Louisiana has sent patients struggling with addiction to work for free for some of the biggest companies in America, likely in violation of federal labor law. The Cenikor Foundation has dispatched tens of thousands of patients to work without pay at more than 300 for-profit companies over the years. In the name of rehabilitation, patients have moved boxes in a sweltering warehouse for Walmart, built an oil platform for Shell and worked at an Exxon refinery along the Mississippi River.

Cancer survivors Evalyn Bodick, 74, and Barbara Marsic, 63, are caught in the crossfire of one of the fiercest health care fights in the country. They fear they are about to lose access to the doctors they say have kept them alive. The reason: the latest skirmish in a nearly decade-old battle between two large health systems in Pennsylvania, the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center (UPMC) and Highmark Blue Cross Blue Shield.

Humana and telehealth company Doctor on Demand will launch a new health plan design allowing employers and employees to receive primary care predominantly through virtual visits. The plan, called On Hand, allows Humana members to avoid the doctor's office and access primary-care services virtually from one Doctor on Demand physician, with access to urgent care, preventive care and behavioral health services.

Technology that translates neural activity into speech would be transformative for people who are unable to communicate as a result of neurological impairments. Decoding speech from neural activity is challenging because speaking requires very precise and rapid multi-dimensional control of vocal tract articulators.

Top Stories

- Opioid manufacturer Insys Therapeutics Inc. has settled a government investigation into its marketing practices for its fentanyl-based medication for $225 million. Insys admitted it was guilty of participating in a fraud "speaker program" scheme in which doctors were bribed to prescribe the company's product, Subsys, even when it was unnecessary for patients. (NPR News <
- William Husel, an Ohio doctor, was charged with killing 25 patients over the course of four years by prescribing high and sometimes fatal doses of fentanyl between February 2015 and November 2018. Husel, who turned himself in to police, could face 15 years to life in prison for each count if convicted. The Trump administration on Wednesday ended funding of medical research by government scientists using fetal tissue and canceled a multimillion-dollar contract for a university laboratory that relies on the material to test new HIV therapies. The determination to tighten federal support for an ideologically polarizing aspect of medical research was made by President Trump himself, a White House spokesman confirmed.

The United States has recorded 1,001 measles cases so far this year in the worst outbreak of the highly contagious disease in more than a quarter-century, federal health officials said on Wednesday as they issued a new plea for parents to vaccinate their children. The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention said 61 new cases have been reported since May 27 of the sometimes deadly disease.

Shares of pharmaceutical company Mallinckrodt seesawed Wednesday after it announced a tentative deal with the U.S. Justice Department to settle a drug bribery probe into Questcor Pharmaceuticals, which it acquired in 2014. Mallinckrodt said it expects to pay $15.4 million to the DOJ after two whistleblower lawsuits claimed Questcor improperly promoted and bribed doctors to prescribe its popular drug H.P. Acthar Gel.

One of the key victories contained within 2010's Affordable Care Act was the requirement that most insurance plans cover recommended preventive services for women - such as mammograms - without any patient cost-sharing. But it didn't require insurance plans to cover, without any patient cost-sharing, additional screenings and tests if that mammogram detected an abnormality.

Top Stories

- The Federal Bureau of Investigation is probing uBiome Inc. concerning allegations that the lab-testing startup used improper billing codes in claims and ordered unnecessary tests in an effort to maximize profit, according to people familiar with the issue. The uBiome board has also formed a special committee to head its own investigation and is cooperating with federal authorities. (The Wall Street Journal <
- Margaret Hamburg, co-chair of an international advisory committee on human genome-editing, and Victor Dzau, president of the U.S. National Academy of Medicine, said they are concerned about a Russian biologist's plan to produce gene-edited babies using CRISPR technology but acknowledged they are powerless to stop him from doing so. Molecular biologist Denis Rebrikov of Moscow is looking to implant gene-edited embryos into women as early as this year - pending approval from the Russian government - in an attempt to create HIV-resistant offspring. Talal Ansari, The Wall Street Journal

San Francisco is expected to become the first city in the U.S. to ban e-cigarettes this week, a move that will likely pit the city against one of its fastest-growing startups: Juul Labs Inc. The San Francisco Board of Supervisors will hold a final vote on the ordinance, which bans the sale, distribution and manufacturing of e-cigarettes, on Tuesday. The measure will then need to be signed by the mayor, London Breed.

A federal regulation demands that certain health care organizations provide patients who have limited English skills a written notice of free translation services. But the Trump administration wants to ease those regulations and also no longer require that directions be given to patients on how they can report discrimination they experience.

Health Voters have big health-care worries, but not the ones Democrats are talking about

Amy Goldstein, The Washington Post

Medicare-for-all. Medicare for all who want it. Health care as a form of freedom. As they campaign, most of the 23 Democratic candidates for president are trumpeting bold ideas to achieve the party's long-held dream of ushering in health coverage for every American. The problem is that many voters are not focused on such lofty goals. They want something simpler - to pay less for their own health care.

'Medicare for All' vs. 'Public Option': The 2020 Field Is Split, Our Survey Shows

They were told to arrive early if they wanted to see a doctor, so Lisa and Stevie Crider left their apartment in rural Tennessee almost 24 hours before the temporary medical clinic was scheduled to open. They packed a plastic bag with what had become their daily essentials after 21 years of marriage: An ice pack for his recurring chest pain. Tylenol for her swollen feet.

Sandee LaMotte, CNN

If you're a healthy older adult looking for ways to reduce your risk of heart attack and stroke, don't turn to that age-old standby: daily low-dose aspirin. It's no longer recommended as a preventative for older adults who don't have a high risk or existing heart disease, according to guidelines announced Sunday by the American College of Cardiology and the American Heart Association.
